Students with degrees in disciplines other than public health may choose to take the public health prerequisite courses before matriculating. Doing so would shorten the number of semesters of being registered in the PhD program.

 Be certain that the course is offered by a CEPH accredited school or program.
 Be certain that the course is registered onto an official university transcript.

 To fulfill the requirement of having a graduate level introduction to public health, the following are acceptable options, in descending order of preference:
  a) Foundations of Public Health—an overview course that touches on behavioral science, health policy, and health management, as well as the health care system
  b) Health Behavior/Social and Behavioral Sciences—focuses on theories and interventions related to health behavior of individuals, groups, and populations.

The following Universities offer the 3 required courses as online offerings. Listing here does not indicate endorsement. UNCC has no relationship to these programs. This list is intended to be suggestive, not definitive, and offering by the university may change.
